Certificate in Diversity and Stratification (12 credits) | www.cda.uidaho.edu

Leading in the value and strength of diversity

The Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Justice Studies at the University of Idaho offers a Certificate of Completion in Diversity and Stratification. The interdisciplinary certificate program provides an avenue for students, professionals and community members to obtain comprehensive, university-centered diversity training and learning through classroom, online, workshop, internship and service learning formats.

About the Program

- 12 credits
- Program has been featured by the American Sociological Association
- Courses of study are distributed between academic exploration (6 credits minimum) and application (3-6 credits)
- Students select from an array of courses, workshops and experiential alternatives to tailor the program to their specific fields of study while also experiencing applicability in the workplace environment
- Upon completion of the program, the certificate acknowledges competency in understanding a broad range of diversity issues and an ability to apply that understanding to the workplace and in the community.

Program Benefits Highlights

- Integrates an appreciation of "difference" with an understanding of inequalities and conflict.
- Fosters interpersonal, intergroup and intercultural communication, understanding and conflict management skills.
- Prepares professionals to effectively communicate in an increasingly diverse workplace.
- Challenges participants to reflect on and evaluate their own social behavior and conceptions concerning diversity while providing new knowledge to do so.
- Provides an application of academic learning through workshops and experiential learning opportunities.
