"Ties to the Land": Next Steps

A conference for Ties to the Land alumni and anyone interested in sustainable land transfer between generations . . .

Millions of acres of family-owned forest land in the U.S. will change hands in the next few years. Some forests and other rural lands may be converted to different uses because owners didn't take charge of the succession process in time.

To address these issues, a curriculum titled "Ties to the Land" (TTTL) was developed at Oregon State University with support from Tree Farm and many other groups. In 2011, California, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington received a grant to make this program more widely available to family forest owners in their states. Over 250 people have attended TTTL workshops in Idaho since 2009.

The TTTL "Next Steps" conference is designed to provide follow-up content from professional succession planners and others on the fine details of making your family's succession plan succeed. The conference is designed for previous TTTL workshop participants, but anyone is welcome to attend.
