Courses Developed:

Critical Legal Studies: Developed this course as a first time offering at the College of Law. The course's objectives were to introduce students to critical scholarship dealing with the law, race, gender, gender identity, and equality.

Consumer Law: Developed this course as a first time offering at the College of Law. The course's objectives were to introduce students to the complex body of laws that govern the most common consumer transactions and to enable students to effectively practice law in this area.

Architecture and the Law: Co-Developed this course with Associate Professor Roman Montoto of the College of Art and Architecture. The course's objectives were to provide an interdisciplinary learning experience to both law and architecture students, prepare both groups of students for professional practice in their chosen fields, and sensitize students to demands and approaches used by other professionals in a business setting.

Property Security: Developed this course as a first time offering combining both secured finance for personal property under the Uniform Commercial Code and real estate under state statutory and common law.

Contracts: Re-designed the Contracts I & II curriculum to fit in a single semester, 4 credit course from a 2 semester offering.
