

Fall 2003 Statistics 501 Graduate Seminar

R, and R Programming

Rob Keefe

M.S. student in Forest Biometrics, UI

4:00 p.m. Thursday, September 18, 2003
Renfrew 132

Abstract

Over the last few years, an open-source statistical programming package called R has become increasingly popular. With many leading statisticians contributing to its development, R's capabilities now rival those of many commercially developed packages. I'll provide a quick overview of R's history, functionality, and language structure.