CHARACTER AND FITNESS

The College of Law considers matters of character in determining an applicant's fitness for the study of law. Training in the law and our legal system imposes obligations on the student to maintain the highest values of integrity and moral character. These obligations are essential training for all those who study the law, and particularly for those who might seek admission to the bar and the practice of law. The bar authority in each state carefully investigates an applicant's character and fitness to practice law. Indeed, you should consult with the bar admission authorities of the state(s) in which you might wish to practice about any incident in your past which might be of sufficient importance to bar you from admission to the practice of law.

It is essential that you answer each of the following questions completely, truthfully, and without evasion of any kind. It is your responsibility to determine the nature of your criminal and educational record. Failure to answer each question completely, truthfully, and without evasion will be considered a deliberate misrepresentation and may result in revocation of admission, suspension, or dismissal from law school. It will also be reported to appropriate bar authorities and may prevent you from sitting for the bar examination. When in doubt, err on the side of full disclosure.

Answers to the following questions will be treated by the College of Law as confidential and no disclosure will be made without the applicant's permission, except to the Admissions Committee and appropriate law school personnel, as required by law, or as required by appropriate bar authorities in connection with your application for admission to the bar.
