Become a Student Ambassador

KEY ROLES

- Provide information at college and high school events such as career and job fairs, and other recruitment functions and in high school classrooms throughout the Pacific Northwest
- Engage student groups with hands-on activities showcasing natural resources programs and professions
- Conduct tours of the College of Natural Resources building and facilities
- Participate in speaking engagements to represent the university, college, and its programs
- Assist with advising and registering incoming students

In addition, the Student Ambassador Veterans Liaison
- Provides information and resources to new and continuing student veterans.
- Assists in the recruitment and retention of the college’s student-veterans.

Mission:
- Understand the needs of prospective students and their families and develop positive relationships while inspiring them to enroll
- Educate others about opportunities and programs at the University of Idaho and the College of Natural Resources
- Always be sincere, positive, dependable, knowledgeable, enthusiastic and motivated
- Distinguish ourselves as leaders and professionals on campus and in the community through continuous learning, cooperative participation, and meaningful interactions

BENEFITS

Being a Student Ambassador is an honor and distinction, as only a small number of students are selected. Student Ambassadors receive unparalleled opportunities to develop communication and leadership skills and are often the first to be called upon to represent the college when engaging prospective students. Through a 400-level Natural Resource course, ambassadors receive academic credit and ongoing training to cultivate skills that they will utilize their entire lives. Ambassadors build communication skills in public relations, work with and learn from CNR faculty and staff, enhance their resumes and gain community outreach experience. By sharing their personal experiences and knowledge, they foster influential relationships with prospective and new students and their families.