When you have a loss in your life, it's important to allow yourself to grieve and to grieve for as long as it takes to work through the loss. Others in our lives can help us through the grief process, and we need to welcome and seek their help, but there are things you can do to help yourself, too. Here are some suggestions to consider:

- Recognize your loss by putting your grief into words — write it down in a journal, in a letter to yourself or in a letter to the person who has died; express it to a close friend or family member; talk to your spiritual leader or a professional counselor.

- Join a support group that deals with grief. This is a safe environment where you can express your grief openly and talk with others who are experiencing similar feelings. Your local mental health center, hospital, or crisis line can direct you to groups in your area.

- Take care of yourself. Keep a regular schedule, eat a balanced diet, get adequate rest, and exercise moderately.

- Avoid taking on new or extra responsibilities that may add stress to your life.

- Control the urge to make life-changing decisions. A loss causes a major disruption in our life and feelings of being "lost at sea" are common. Be patient and make small decisions or identify tasks that can be easily accomplished — this helps you feel confident and in control of your life.

- Plan activities that give you something to look forward to and that bring you comfort and enjoyment — a walk with a friend, going out to eat, a vacation, a day at the spa. If a holiday or anniversary is an especially difficult time, plan activities or ask a friend to plan activities that you find supportive.

- Let your friends, co-workers, and family know what you need from them. They may feel hesitant to talk about your loss, "I don’t want to open that wound or say something that will make you cry." If talking about your loss brings you comfort, let others know this. Sharing memories tells the bereaved that their loss is real and remembered and that the pain of loss is shared.

- Learn your workplace's policy on bereavement leave and talk over options with your supervisor if you need more time or a temporary adjustment in work hours, workload, or responsibilities.

If you need somewhere to turn, your Employee Assistance Program is available. Through your EAP, you have access to free, confidential counseling services, as well as a variety of resources to help you deal with difficult times.

For additional information regarding this topic, contact your Employee Assistance Program via the web or toll free number listed below.

www.apshelplink.com
1-800-999-1077

The contents of this article and referenced websites, such as text, graphics, images, and other material contained on the site are for informational purposes only. The content is not intended to be a substitute for professional medical advice, diagnosis, or treatment. Always seek the advice of your physician or other qualified health provider with any questions you may have regarding a medical condition. Reliance on any information provided by these websites is solely at your own risk. APS is not responsible for the contents of any 'off-site' web page referenced from this server. ©APS Healthcare, Inc., White Plains, NY. All rights reserved.