The Palouse Language and Culture Symposium

Promote cultural diversity
Foster dialogues among learners, educators, and researchers
Create a bridge between languages and cultures

Keynote Speaker: Rodney Frey, Professor Emeritus of Ethnography, University of Idaho
Welcome to the Palouse Language and Culture Symposium, hosted by a collaboration of departments at the University of Idaho.

In our fifth year as a symposium, we bring together a varied schedule of topics related to culture and language. We are pleased to have presenters with diverse experiences and backgrounds, who represent a number of regional universities. We are continually impressed by the rich cultures represented on the Palouse, with research from Hong Kong to Mexico, and research on language including Arabic and Basque. The scholarship shared at this symposium represents the heart and desire to foster dialogue between sub-cultures within the U.S., as well as to create bridges between individuals internationally. Our hope is for you to engage with and support each other today, and leave enriched and hopeful for the future.

On behalf of the organizing committee, the volunteers, and the sponsors, we wish you a great 2018 Palouse Language and Culture Symposium.

Carry Forth the Stories

Dr. Frey draws from his most recent book, Carry Forth the Stories, an ethnographic memoir of over forty years of research and relationship building with Native elders from throughout the region. This presentation will illustrate the power of the spoken word and storytelling as a method of passing down cultural traditions, knowledge, and language, and in doing so, consider the interplay of diversity and universality in our lives. Highlighted will be the important role empathy plays in our communications and relationships.

See Dr. Frey’s bio on the next page…
Rodney Frey is Professor Emeritus of Ethnography, having been with the University of Idaho since 1998. Under the guidance of Deward Walker, he received a Ph.D. in Anthropology from the University of Colorado in 1979. He is also indebted to such indigenous hosts and mentors as Tom and Susie Yellowtail of the Crow, Lawrence Aripa and Cliff SiJohn of Coeur d’Alene, Rob and Rose Moran of the Chippewa and Warm Springs, and Josiah and D’Lisa Pinkham of the Nez Perce. Through their guidance, the power of story and empathy was revealed, transforming his professional as well as personal life.

While successfully publishing much of this research, co-authoring it with the elders of these Tribes, the challenge remains: How to re-tell the stories of the Indigenous, validating the wisdom embedded in their stories, doing so authentically and ethically? May the stories and the wisdom the elders enrich the lives of all of humanity.

Incorporating Original Research in the Undergraduate Foreign Language Classroom
Ashley Kerr, University of Idaho

Studies have demonstrated that undergraduate research is a high-impact student experience. Nonetheless, it has rarely been incorporated into the foreign language classroom. In this presentation, I use my own experience incorporating original research into a Spanish course to lay out a model for undergraduate research in foreign languages.

Utilizing Games in Grammar Teaching
Huan-mei Hall, Gonzaga University

This workshop is to encourage teachers to adapt games to raise students' motivation of grammar learning experience. Three games are provided. Participants will be trained to design an effective lesson with the authentic materials. Although some games might be known, the methodology of games may be applied to other classes.

Using Nearpod in Teaching and Learning
Seyed Abdollah Shahrokni, Washington State University

This presentation will elaborate on the educational uses of Nearpod from a literacy engagement framework. The participants will be introduced to a very useful application which can be adopted in various educational settings.

Family Language Policy: Insights into Arab Parents' Experiences
Mohammed Alzahrani, Washington State University

This presentation reports the language policies of five Arab families in the United States. Results indicated that the decision to use a specific language within families is multifaceted and dependent upon children's preferences and parents' beliefs. Results with regards to parents' language beliefs, practices, and management are discussed.

The Value Of Small Talk in the L2 Classroom
Andrea Mason & Bal Krishna Sharma, University of Idaho

Small talk has value in the L2 classroom where it functions as a rapport-building resource. Findings from this classroom-based discourse analysis indicate that small talk has potential in developing learners' interactive competence. These results, as well as strategies for integrating small talk into the L2 classroom, will be discussed.

Mimic Presentations: Reexamining Behaviorism for Approaches in Teaching Speaking/Listening
Margot Volem, University of Idaho

This presentation will introduce a practice in teaching Listening/Speaking skills to English Language Learners that uses mimicry to focus on rhythm, intonation, pronunciation, and emotion. The "Mimic Presentation" is a student assignment that draws inspiration from Behaviorist ideas within Second Language Acquisition Theory, yet adds relevance by allowing students autonomy over content, and encourages meaningful learning through a fun and unique process.

Oh, The Places You'll Go! Making the Most of Conferences
Tenzin Dulal & Lorrae Fox, University of Idaho

New professionals are often unaware of how to find conferences to attend, and more so, how to make the best out of them. In this discussion-based practical presentation, two seasoned conference go-ers share their experiences and top tips on how to make the most out of conferences you go to!

Words with Friends: Using Formulaic Sequences to Build Communicative Competence
Mary Goodrich, Gonzaga University

Over half of all language we use is formulaic, that is, it is comprised of groups of words that are remembered and retrieved as wholes. This presentation will demonstrate several activities to help students notice, remember, and expand formulaic sequences that can be incorporated into everyday lessons.

Co-Constructing Identity with International Students after the 2016 Election
Sela Ellen Underwood, Washington State University

The way teachers talk with students has real implications in terms of identity and belonging. This discourse analysis study examines how these themes emerge in a conversation following the 2016 US presidential election, and presents a key finding that teachers may position international students as outsiders despite their cosmopolitan identities.
Glad to Hear It: Podcasts to Engage Students in Listening
Sara Schroeder, University of Montana

Podcasts are an effective way to engage language students in listening practice and to support listening skills. In addition, the use of podcasts can target various other language skills, including vocabulary, grammar, inference, and even speaking skills. This demonstration will introduce several sources for using and sharing podcasts with students, and will highlight adaptable activities for using podcasts in your own classroom.

Comparison of Culture and Language: Mexico, Basque Country and Idaho
Ana Alcocer & Sara Prado, University of Idaho

Culture and language usage varies greatly even between countries where the same language is spoken. This presentation discusses the experiences of Spanish instructors from Mexico and the Basque Country as they incorporate their cultural norms, body language, and vocabulary usage into teaching Spanish courses at the UI.

Arabic and English: Beyond the Alphabet
Margaret Diehl, Gonzaga University

I took Arabic 101 to gain a deeper understanding of what my Arabic speaking students experience when learning English. This presentation discusses language transfer between Arabic and English, focusing on morphology and spelling, and provides practical strategies that can be used in the classroom to specifically support Arabic speakers.

Parental Engagement in Home Literacy Activities Among Transnational Chinese Families
Yue Huang, Washington State University

This study examines the home literacy ecology of transnational Chinese families in the US and develops the notion of "transnational guan," expanding the traditional concept of parental guan (supervision). Findings reveal three unique roles these parents play in children's home literacy activities, including parent as learner, amateur tutor, and bridge.

Notes
Integrating Language Play into the L2 Classroom: Teaching Hyperbolic Numerals

Nancy Bell, Washington State University

Despite evidence for the teachability of non-literal language and acknowledgment of the potential of language play to facilitate L2 development, language classrooms remain focused on utilitarian forms. This presentation shares tasks designed to fit into existing lessons on quantifiers that introduce L2 users to hyperbolic numerals (e.g. zillion).

Introducing World Englishes to First-Year Students in North Idaho

Mikayla Sievers, University of Idaho

British colonization spread English around the world, and World Englishes emerged. I will discuss how I incorporated WEes into my English 102 course. In an era of globalization, it's important that students develop awareness about WEes. Additionally, such pedagogical activities will help them be linguistically and culturally aware of others.

In the Wake Of #MeToo: A Look at the Reaction in France

Anne Perriguey & Sarah Nelson, University of Idaho

The purpose of this presentation is to briefly explain how some French feminists reacted to the #MeToo movement and to attempt to give an explanation to their seemingly radical reaction, using a cultural lens.

Reconnoitering in Foreign Territory: Language Lessons Learned in Law School

Sandra Bancroft-Billings, Washington State University

This study is an expedition into the world of law school by way of a quintessential course: contracts. It aims to examine the written and spoken language of that course and to identify language features that could be especially challenging to law students for whom English is a second language.
Fix Fossilized Pronunciation
Sharon Fraser-Allen, Washington State University
Concrete ideas and exercises to use with advanced ESL students to help them improve their pronunciation and be understood. The focus of this session will be on fixing problems of intonation, syllabication, and vowel length.

Teaching Outside of the Box and into the Circle: Indigenous Pedagogy at Work in Academia
Roger Vielle, University of Idaho
This interactive presentation will highlight ways that Indigenous ways of knowing can be applied in the classroom. Native pedagogy, or circular learning is not widely recognized or accepted in Western academia, yet can provide engaging and sustainable learning experiences that break down stereotypes and create appreciation for other cultures.

Colloquial Indonesian: Linguistic Attitudes, Legitimacy, Youth, and Teaching Critical Languages
Brian Malone, University of Idaho
Bahasa Indonesia, Indonesia's official language and a "Critical Language" for Americans, is a formal, national second language meant to unify a multilingual population. Increasingly, urban youths innovate, creating a controversial colloquial variety that challenges the language's social role. This talk examines the pedagogical implications of this generational shift.

Gonzaga ESL Community Outreach: What's Working and What's the Future
Sarah Griffith, Gonzaga University
The presenter will provide research on Gonzaga ESL Community Outreach (GECO), a student-run community-based ESL program established in 2012. The presenter will provide attendees with key findings and tips for launching a similar program at their university or within their community.

Awards Ceremony & Refreshments: 2:20 – 2:35

Our Whole Lives (OWL) Sexual Education Curricula in Higher Education
Tom Salsbury, Washington State University &
Lysa Salsbury, University of Idaho

Presenters overview Our Whole Lives (OWL) sexual education curricula and explain how they incorporate core curricular principles in the work they do with student services programming and teacher education. They focus on a campus-based sexual education program and a teacher preparation seminar on responding to children's values-based questions on sexuality.

On Teaching Phrasal Verbs: An Examination of Verb Particle Constructions with Up
Kathryn Pawelko, University of Idaho

An examination of pedagogical techniques derived from cognitive linguistics to assist L2 learners in developing awareness of Verb Particle Constructions using corpus data to develop radial networks of meaning. This paper examines constructions containing the particle up, as an example of a common construction encountered by learners in authentic interactions.

Fostering Taiwanese Students' Critical Awareness through Reading Postmodern Picturebooks
Ying-Hsuan Lee, Washington State University

As part of a larger qualitative study, this presentation focuses on the possibility of fostering Taiwanese 3rd- and 4th-graders' critical awareness through reading Piggybook (Browne, 1990). Visual discourse analysis is used to analyze students' written and illustrated responses to the story.

Ethical Identity Construction and Maintenance through the Hmong Heritage Language
Nalee Moua, Washington State University

With an increase in CLD communities in the U.S, individuals are faced with multiple challenges revolving around culture and heritage language maintenance. Acculturate or assimilate? This study explores the role of the Hmong heritage language in the construction and maintenance of Hmong ethnic identity among 1.5 and 2nd generation Hmong-Americans.
