4-H CROCHET PROJECT

History of Crochet

Crochet is a form of needlework that has been practiced throughout time in almost every corner of the world. The word crochet is a French name meaning “little hook.” It consists of the interlocking of looped stitches formed with a single thread or yarn and a hooked needle. Many variations are possible with different stitch patterns, combinations of colors, sizes and textures of yarns or threads, and sizes of hooks. It is a handicraft so simple and enjoyable that it continues to be a favorite form of needle art. The endless variations, the individual look of each piece, the swiftness of the work, and the personal satisfaction achieved by the crocheter make this a creative and adaptable project.

The origin of the art of crocheting is unknown. Early needlework implements were made of wire with a hook at one end. Hooks were also carved out of wood and bone. Some of the Indian tribes in North America practiced an early form of this art. The earliest European settlers in America created household items with their crochet hooks, but crocheting did not become popular in Europe or America until the beginning of the 19th century. Irish immigrants first popularized crochet trims and garments in this country.

Until the early part of the 20th century crochet work was done mostly as edging or decoration. Almost all crocheting was done with thread. Doilies were made and used to decorate and protect furniture. In the 1930’s women crocheted hats and purses. Within the last forty years the use of 4-ply yarns has become very popular. They are used to make afghans, garments, toys and handicraft items.
