

Erin Stewart is in her third year at Northeastern University School of Law. She is a student researcher for Northeastern's Cradle to Prison Pipeline Project and a co-author of the prison and jail study. While earning her undergraduate degree in economics, Erin Stewart worked at a public middle school in South Seattle. In the fall, Erin will be starting a Skadden Fellowship at Citizens for Juvenile Justice in Boston, Massachusetts. She will be representing juveniles in school-discipline hearings and in court for school-based arrests. Erin's lifelong commitment is to improve systems along the pipeline to benefit our nation's youth.