PLAY SYNOPSIS:
Queen Elizabeth I receives a formal petition from the House of Commons to “marry as soon as possible”. Forced to entertain the letters of potential suitors, Elizabeth gathers her ladies in waiting for a night of wine, music, and gossip. They diligently sort through these would-be matches for the queen, while Elizabeth keeps her budding romance with longtime friend Robert Dudley a secret. This Elizabethan romance turned modern-day slumber party blurs and mixes history with contemporary culture.

NOTES FROM THE PLAYWRIGHT:

Casting
We are playing with history, shoehorning various characters and events that span decades into one night. As history is fluid in this play, casting should not be based on traditional Elizabethan looks. Any female identifying actor may be cast in any of the female roles, regardless of ethnicity, body type, age, etc. This play celebrates women, so the casting process should as well. (Hair color lines may change if desired.) In addition, ANY actor may play the male roles. Understudies may be referred to as Lords and Ladies in Waiting. If double casting is needed, the male roles may be played by as few as two actors.

Accents
Each of the four suitors should have accents that reflect their home country and may be used for comedic effect. The women, Robert, and Cecil should only do British accents if all are capable of authentic accents. Otherwise, American accents are fine
